

For my hypertext narrative, I will be creating a story set in New York. The user will be a character that has to make different choices throughout the day that will lead them to meet different people. Each unique scene will be described with the ability to meet strangers in each setting. Every user will have a different experience at the end of the day depending on which choices they make. For example, one could choose to take the subway and end up meeting the woman at the ticket counter or the man waiting for his train. Another user may end up going to the park, meeting the man drawing portraits, or the dog playing fetch. I like the idea of being able to decide how the character's day goes and who you will meet through the experience.

